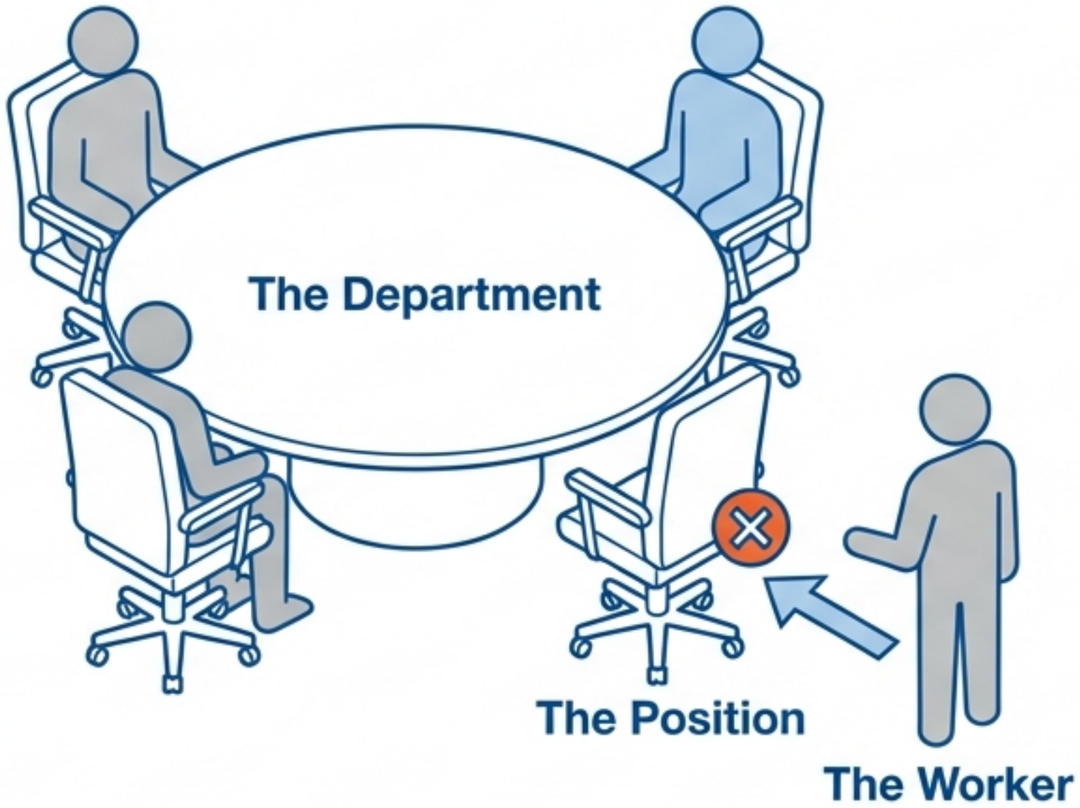
Manage the Chair, Not Just the Person

Understanding the core philosophy of our staffing model.

VISUAL ANALOGY



EXPLANATORY TEXT

The Table: The Supervisory Organization (Team/Department).

The Chair: The Position. A specific seat with defined attributes (e.g., location, hours).

The Person: The Worker. The employee sitting in the chair.

Key Principle: The Chair exists independently of the Person.

Rule #1: You cannot hire a person unless there is an empty chair available.

Translating the Analogy to Workday

The Analogy	Workday Component
The Team Structure	Supervisory Organization A team of employees reporting to a manager. The structure where work happens.
The Seat	Position The specific slot assigned to a job profile. Security roles and history are attached here, not just to the worker.
The Chair Specs	Job Profile Describes the type of chair (Title, Level, Exempt/Non-Exempt). Attributes are fixed to the position.
Permission to Fill	Job Requisition The formal request to recruit and fill an empty Position.

The Position Lifecycle

Define position attributes and Job Profile. This action sets the budget for the seat.
Even unfilled positions appear in the org chart.

Create a Requisition to find a candidate. This links the recruitment process to the specific empty position.

Hire a worker into the seat.

Feature Spotlight: Overlap allows hiring a replacement before the current worker leaves.

When a worker leaves:

Option A: Keep Open (Backfill).

Option B: Close Position (Remove Headcount).

Strategic Benefits of the Model

Budget Control

Instant visibility into Budgeted vs. Actual headcount. Prevents accidental over-hiring by ensuring a position exists before a hire can occur.

Data Integrity

History is etched on the "chair." If a worker leaves, the role's history remains with the position, enabling accurate tracking of unfilled roles.

Planning

Facilitates coordination between Finance and HR. Clarifies reporting structures through strict Supervisory Organizations.

Position Management enables us to optimize our workforce structure for efficiency and productivity.
